SOUTHERN MEATS RENEWABLE ENERGY LAGOON NEARING COMPLETION

Works are nearing completion on a 'digestion lagoon' for Southern Meats Abattoir, and ReNu Energy. Holding a maximum of 22.7 mega litres of storage, the dam traps and treats liquid waste, resulting in usable water for irrigation.

The main by-product of methane, will be trapped and converted into electricity for use in the day to day operations of Southern Meats, whilst offsetting grid electricity and mainstream gas reliance.

Divall's commenced works in early June, and completion is expected within the next few weeks. Utilising dozers, scrapers, excavators, dump trucks, backhoes and rollers, the team were able to complete all civil earthworks required for the project.

Scott Newton from Southern Meats commented that "everyone has remarked on how great the dam is" and that "the Divall's team were efficient, communicative and have been fantastic whilst working on the site".
